

In Salem(Start film) - more than 40 residents of two Roanoke County residents attended a meeting of the County Sanitation Authority yesterday, protesting sewer-rates and charges clamped on by the Authority. (Show film)

North

The residents - most of them from/Norwood and Morwanda Park subdivisions - asked a lot of questions, but they got few answers in return. Most of the questions dealt with sewer rates, refunds on unused sewer service and the legality of the Authority's borrowing 600 thousand dollars to finance the North 11 sewer project. The 40 residents say they're being made to pay for that sewer project without deriving any benefits from it. Dr. J. Carl Poindexter was the spokesman for the protestors. But he didn't get much farther than some other residents when it came to getting answers. The public hearing on the sewer-rate controversy is slated before the State Corporation

Commission in Richmond next month.
