An old problem has pushed to the surface again at Roanoke's Municipal Building.

(TAKE FILM)

Electoral Board Officials say the lack of office space is holding up work on splitting two City voting precincts.

Members of the Board say new boundaries are ready to be drawn but work cannot proceed because the Boards records are now roosting in the hall by the City Registrar's Office.

They ended up in the hall after being shifted around several offices. Because of the lack of space, Registrar Nell Irvin says she had to lay off her assistant temporarily. Board members say they can't work in the hall and would like to know where their records will be put.
